CONGRESSIONAL LEADERSHIP

Senate

Senate leadership positions are an integral part of the functioning of the United States Senate and are typically chosen for a two-year term at the beginning of each Congress. The Majority and Minority leaders are the elected spokespersons on the Senate floor for their respective political parties. It is very difficult for legislation to reach the Senate floor for debate without it being cleared by the leadership.

House of Representatives

In the House, the Speaker serves as the top leader who is elected by the whole House of Representatives for a two-year term. The Speaker has several combined roles, including the responsibility of presiding over legislative business, serving as the leader of the majority party and as an elected member representing their own congressional district. The Speaker, with support from party leadership, determines which pieces of legislation will be considered and debated by the full House.
